

Dear Student:

The purpose of this letter is to share key information and establish a foundation to move forward regarding Advanced Placement United States History. It is likely that APUSH is your first-ever AP class; you are probably planning on others before you graduate from high school. Apart from course-related content (American history), you will be introduced to study skills which will come in handy in future AP classes.

The standards are exceedingly high . . . no excuses or shortcuts are appropriate. APUSH is essentially a college-level course and is therefore conducted in that spirit. Reading assignments are extensive. Tests consist of multiple-choice questions and various types of essay-response items in accordance with the College Board National Examination format. Our journey through United States history starts with peopling of the Americas and stretches into the current millennium.

Study is very comprehensive. We go beyond mere fact recall (otherwise known as memorization) to the higher levels of knowledge (synthesis, analysis, and evaluation). This is accomplished by creating a solid reservoir of data, and then linking one historical moment to another, and to another, and to yet another. Our ultimate goal is to make sense of history by recognizing the interlocking mechanisms and often obscure ingredients which link the vast array of dates and events and people to create a giant chronological mural.

Although there are no absolute prerequisites for this course, simple logic dictates that you should be academically accomplished (relatively high GPA) and possess some degree of interest in American history. Further, you should be adept at self-directed study, embrace sense of personal accountability, make attendance a priority, and be willing to create and manage well appropriate amount of time needed for suitable consumption and processing of knowledge. Major shortcomings in any of these areas, as well as an exorbitantly hectic extra-curricular agenda and/or employment schedule, might be potentially problematic for you. This class is very demanding of both time and effort—no viable shortcuts exist.

Your enrollment in APUSH makes you eligible to take the National Exam in early May. Based on your test score, factored with the university selected to attend upon graduation from high school, you may earn college credit. The cost of the National Exam is less than $100.

Over the 25-plus years this course has been offered at Stevens High School, the majority of APUSHers have performed well on the National Exam. Roughly 90 percent of students who successfully addressed all components of APUSH have passed the test with scores equivalent to grades of A or B in a college-level course. This does not happen by simply enrolling in APUSH. It comes through constant and consistent effort, starting with day one (summer preparatory work, actually). Above all, you should understand that APUSH is a no-nonsense course and you will be expected to conduct yourself academically and socially at levels which might very well be advanced and unfamiliar to you.

Once February, March, and April are upon us, we schedule plenty of after-hours review sessions (mornings, lunchtime, evenings, and weekends) in preparation for the National Exam. Your attendance at these meetings is optional, though highly recommended. It has been my experience that students who perform well on the National Exam take advantage of every opportunity offered, including these extra study sessions.

I know what it takes to prepare students for the National Exam, and it is my professional responsibility to proceed accordingly—high expectations exist for instruction, as well! Attention to my recommendations will put you in optimum position to score well. However, the ultimate responsibility for success or failure on the National Exam rests with you, of course.

Besides the National Exam, the other huge culminating event in APUSH is our excursion to the Little Bighorn Battlefield in southeastern Montana, some historical sites in and near Sheridan, Wyoming, and Devils Tower National Monument. It is a wonderful three-day affair and usually occurs during late April in conjunction with the APUSH evening colloquium which features lecture vignettes by guest experts in history (college professors, authors, site curators, and so forth), as well as brief presentations of student excellence.

I invite you to visit the course Website (best viewed using Internet Explorer) in order to become acquainted with all that APUSH entails. It is full of helpful material and crucial information, although it naturally needs to be updated for the upcoming year—appearance at the start of summer compared to the following fall will differ in spots. Your extensive use of the Website throughout the year is an absolute. Therefore, you might want to take a moment now to create shortcuts on the home computers and personal devices you will use to access the Website.

Perhaps needless to mention, the 2020-21 school year will encounter unprecedented and unpredictable classroom challenges due to the ongoing COVID-19 intrusion. This reality underscores the necessity of scholastic commitment on the part of students who are truly invested in maximizing the APUSH opportunity.

If you have questions or concerns, please feel free to contact me. However, keep in mind that e-mail is not checked with any semblance of regularity during the summer months. Unless the matter is absolutely critical, I do not welcome telephone interruptions of my personal life at home. All summer preparatory work is due the day of the school-wide open house held during the week immediately prior to the first day of classes for the new school year. In the meantime, enjoy your summer.

I am glad you will be an APUSHer . . . you made a good decision!

Sincerely,

Scott Tubbs
APUSH Instructor

P.S. There is a parental/guardian version of this letter. Please be sure at least one key adult in your life has access to this overview about the class that will be such a huge part of your life during the next ten months.

Remember these five important things about your commitment to APUSH for next school year:

- ❶ This is a college-level course.
- ❷ The work load is enormous.
- ❸ High levels of academic and social behavior are expected.
- ❹ You must assume major responsibility for self.
- ❺ Irregular attendance is often inherently detrimental.

These standards are not softened due to any circumstances forced by the COVID-19 presence!
